The WellBeing Dictionary

This book serves as a comprehensive guide for individuals seeking personal growth, providing valuable insights to countless questions that people are increasingly pondering.

It is an invaluable resource for counselors and therapists alike, presenting a myriad of definitions and explanations on various topics.

For instance, one of the many definitions found in this book is as follows:

ACCUSATION:

To accuse, we must decide that someone is guilty. An accusation consists of a value judgment passed on a person, a situation or on ourselves because we disagree about something or are reacting to what we consider right and wrong or correct and incorrect. An accusation is always preceded by criticism and judgment whether openly or in our thoughts; i.e., accusing ourselves of weakness, impatience, poverty, lack of selfconfidence, willpower, etc., or accusing others of traits which DISTURB us or affect us emotionally.

As soon as we accuse ourselves or others, we also experience EMOTION which depletes us of our energy. We accuse ourselves or others because we are deeply suffering and refusing to take RESPONSIBILITY. On the other hand, we suffer because we allow our EGO to control our life instead of LOVE. Our hidden fears fuel our accusations -- the fear of not being loved, accepted or validated. When we long to be loved, we don't love ourselves enough and hope others will do it for us.

How can we ever stop accusing? By becoming aware of our FEARS, CRITICISMS, BELIEFS and the deep DESIRES hidden below these fears. Next we must determine whether or not our beliefs are still useful and then act accordingly. If we continue to go against what is beneficial to us, we will keep on accusing ourselves. Realize also that the less we accuse ourselves, the less we will accuse others (and the less they will accuse us) ...

Biography – Nathalie Sainte-Marie

Coming from a background in economics, business management, and sales management training, Nathalie Sainte-Marie has worked nearly 25 years in the corporate world. She held commercial and managerial roles as regional recruitment agency manager and later as head of an international communications department.

Everything changed for her in 2007 during a business lunch when a client gave her the book "Heal your wounds and find you true self"

This opened up the world of emotional wounds in the workplace for her. Despite being highly regarded and sought after for her skills and demeanor, she often felt emotionally hindered by situations that overwhelmed her.

Reading this book allowed her to gain new self-awareness by connecting with her inner world—her emotions and the suffering attitudes in her relationships with work, colleagues, and hierarchy. Gradually shedding the masks she wore for protection, she accepted experiencing burnout. This marked the beginning of her journey as a student of the Listen to Your Body school.

Today, she thrives as a facilitator, speaker and counselor, fully embracing her path. She is also the co-author of the book The 5 Emotional Wounds in Your Workplace with Lise Bourbeau.
